Carranza Outlines New Reforms In Address To Mexican Congress

Queretaro, Mex., Dec. 2.—In his address before the constitutional congress today, General Carranza outlined the reforms he hopes to see embodied in the constitution. He said in part:

"The constitution of 1857 was the result of a great upheaval, and it proclaimed only the general principles of reform without putting them into practical form so that it is not possible to administer the government with this constitution. The history of the country is able to demonstrate this. I promised to confer the liberal terms of the old constitution so that the new reform fairly will eliminate the dead wood and strike out articles put in by the former government for personal advantage."

"Human liberty must be guaranteed to prevent this government from taking advantage of the excuse of maintaining peace in order to commit the old constitution was not strong enough to do this, as the liberty of the individual was at the mercy of executives."

"Judges, however, only the tools of the government, should have the power to investigate and punish wrong doing of governors. Prisoners should be allowed bonds, and trials should be delayed and no arrest should be made without evidence sufficient to justify them."

"The constitution provided for the right of the government to occupy the property of owners by paying an indemnity for the same. It is sufficient to allow the government to take large estates and distribute the manors."

LANDIS CONTINUES LOAN SHARK PROBE IN CHICAGO COURT

Follows Up Discovery That Aged Woman at Reedsburg, Wis., Is Financial Backer For Loan Agencies.

Chicago, Dec. 2.—Judge K. M. Landis in the United States district court on next Monday will resume his inquiry into the processes of the Chicago loan company.

Judge Landis, for many years known here as the nemesis of the "loan shark" business, yesterday covered a trail of the company's business in connection with bankruptcy proceedings instituted by Robert Hutchinson, a local locomotive engineer, who testified that he borrowed $100 from the company, and interest at usurious rates having increased his debt to $340, he had to have the relief of bankruptcy.

Judge Landis brought into court Mr. Hutchinson, secretary and treasurer of the company. It developed that Hutchinson's note was made out to C. M. French.

"Who is C. M. French?" asked the judge.

"C. M. French," replied the witness, "is a woman 80 years old. She lives at Reedsburg, Wis. She has loaned us more than $100,000 to loan in turn to our customers. There is nothing to show exactly how she has loaned us, but she is supposed to get 7% on the arrangement is not a definite one and we send her money when she wants it, perhaps $3,000 or $4,000 a year."

"Who looks after Mrs. French's interests?" Judge Landis asked him.

"J. Mackey, her son. He has no permanent address, but lives mostly in London. He owns eight other loan companies with about forty branches. Some are in Pittsburgh and some in Philadelphia."

Mackey is the polo player and traveler who once entertained the judge at his home in London. He is now in England. He appeared in court here in 1910 in defense of one of his loan companies.

United States District Attorney Kline said he would send an agent to Reedsburg to ascertain whether Mrs. French knows the line of business in which she has invested.

CHANGE IN BRITISH CABINET IS HINTED NEWSPAPERS CLAIM

Bonar Law May Succeed Asquith, With Lloyd George as Ultimate Choice for Prime Minister.

London, Dec. 2.—Cabinet changes involving the reinstatement of Premier Asquith, are predicted by the "Manchester Guardian" in an article in today's issue on the current rumors regarding proposed political changes.

"Rumors are going around on the possibility of imminent changes in the current rumors are that Bonar Law will replace Premier Asquith for the time being, but that final settlement would be Lloyd George as prime minister."

The "Guardian" concludes that the coalition government has not the prestige to withstand the attacks being made upon it and that the house of commons has reached the mood in which it is ready to create another ministry.

The Express says a political crisis has arisen and that the coalition government is likely to go. According to this paper a new war council probably will consist of Premier Asquith, Lloyd George, Bonar Law, Arthur Balfour and Sir Edward Carson.

ADDITIONAL AWARD TO SUPERIOR WIDOW

(SPECIAL TO THE GAZETTE.)

Madison, Wis., Dec. 2.—Because the death of Tostin Swenson was caused by a violation of the state rules, the widow has been awarded $450 additional compensation by the industrial commission. Swenson was a building contractor in Superior. He was killed by the collapse of a scaffold in which the brackets were built of unsound lumber and spaced much too far apart.

The commission has awarded a similar penalty for failure to guard machinery, but this is the first case where such action has been taken in a building accident. Where a penalty is awarded, the burden falls directly on the employer, because insurance policies do not cover illegal acts of the employer.

The commission is endeavoring to get its safety rules into the hands of every contractor and workman.

TWO SEEK PLACE AS SERGEANT AT ARMS

(SPECIAL TO THE GAZETTE.)

Madison, Wis., Dec. 2.—An interesting contest has developed over the selection of the sergeant-at-arms of the next assembly, here where he has held the position for several sessions, and Assemblyman Cretney of Iowa county, who has been defeated by Mr. Irvine, a farmer living at Loyal, Wis., is a candidate for the position.

Both parties have written to all the members of the assembly soliciting support.

There is no opposition has developed to Chief Clerk C. E. Shaffer of Madison, who has held the position for the past five sessions. While the work of the chief clerk is not as important as that of the sergeant-at-arms, it will require a clerk to look after the affairs of the house and the dispatching of legislative business.

FIND STOLEN CAR ON COUNTRY ROAD

Stood in Road Almost Twenty-four Hours Before Being Reported by Farmer.

The automobile of Harry De Boil of Brookfield, stolen Thanksgiving night from the Corn Exchange, was found by the police yesterday afternoon about a mile from the city limits on a minor road. It had stood directly in the middle of the road from about ten o'clock the night before until 4:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon. Farmers passing along the highway were compelled to turn out and around the machine.

The car was reported being there by a farmer. When Officer William Gower drove out with the police car he found the stolen machine's gears damaged, although the engine would run without trouble. It was hitched to the police car and this morning De Boil came to the station and had it hauled to a garage for repairs.

A valuable robe, driving gauntlets and clothing in the car were not stolen, a mystery to the police. When the report of the first case in the investigations were that it would be stripped of every accessory possible to take.

The police believe that the gears became jammed in some way and when the car refused to move the thieves abandoned it, and walked back to the city.

THE HEAVENS IN DECEMBER

Three great rivals for supremacy, Saturn, Jupiter and Sirius—Procyon, the brilliant object—Vega, preparing to say farewell for several months—other luminaries in a brilliant winter spectacle.

Jupiter, the largest planet of the solar system, like Saturn, is decreasing in density its much less than the earth's—both planets rich in moons.

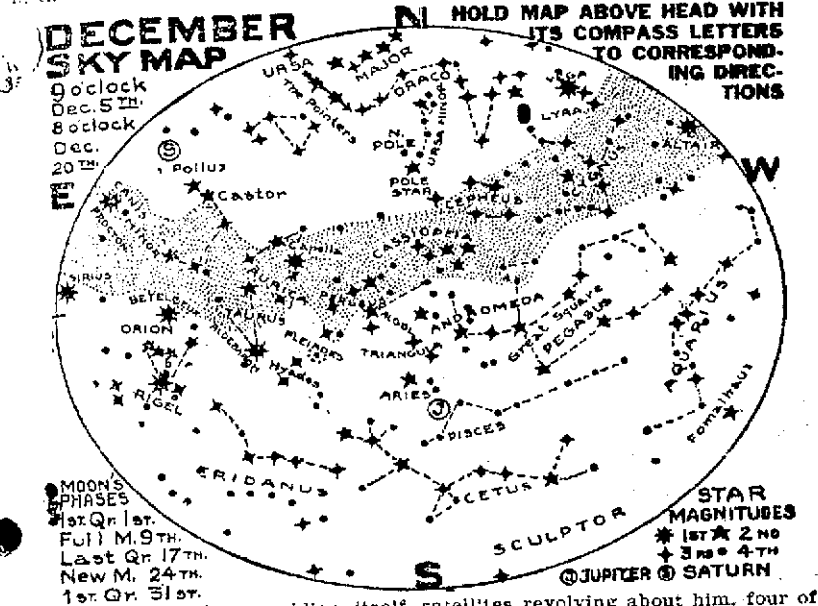

The rings of Saturn composed of discrete particles.

By C. S. Brainin of the Columbia University Observatory staff.

The cold, clear December evenings and three great luminaries contending for the premier position—the two great planets Saturn and Jupiter and the star, Sirius, which is just projecting its rays over the horizon at the time of our map. Procyon, another first magnitude star, has already climbed clear of the horizon, preceding the Greater Dog. Still further up in the heavens is the pinked Saturn, which planet has not yet reached the state of solidification and cooling in which we find the Earth and surely produces the possibility of anything like human life existing on the planet.

A similar state of affairs exists on Saturn, the next largest planet. The diameter is nine times as great as Earth's and the actual weight is 100 times as great, while the density again is much less—only an eighth. As far as surface conditions go the difference between Jupiter and Saturn is not very great. The average distance from the Earth of the former is about 450,000,000 miles, that of the latter 886,000,000 miles.

In the matter of moons both these planets have a great advantage over us, for the planet Saturn has no less than nine of commendable size revealing about him, in addition to the brilliant rings which form his most interesting and prominent characteristics. Jupiter also has nine small satellites revolving about him, four of which are easily visible in a small telescope and indeed under fair conditions in an ordinary opera or field glass.

while almost on the meridian itself we see the great giant of the entire solar system, Jupiter. Between the latter and the eastern horizon we behold the Pleiades, Aldebaran, Capella, and the stars Rigel and Betelgeuse, and the three stars in a perfect straight line which form the Hunter's belt. To the westward is the great Square of Pegasus, and low down on the horizon in the northwest is Vega, which is Alkair and far to the south-west is the great Pomalhaut of the constellation of the Southern Fish. Add to this list the groups of the Great Bear, with its Dipper, Cassiopeia, Cygnus with Deneb, and the Twins, Castor and Pollux, and you have indeed presented to your wondering gaze a sight that is at once a delight to the eye and a source of marvel and deep reflection.

Jupiter and Saturn.

These two differ from all the others in the above list in that they are not stars, in the strict scientific use of the word, but planets, for they, just like the Earth, belong to the Sun's family and rotate in a regular elliptical orbit about the Sun. To the naked eye the difference between them and the stars may not be apparent at first, and it is true that they differ practically not at all in appearance from the stars of great brilliancy, but a little closer observation brings out, perhaps, that they twinkle very little, or not at all, while the stars proper twinkle energetically. Continuous observations, covering a longer or shorter period of time, as may be necessary, will bring out the fact that they seem to be in motion as regards their relative positions to the other stars. The fixed stars change their positions in the heavens in rising and setting, but their relative positions are practically invariable. They are not absolutely invariable, the most refined instruments and methods of research give unmistakable evidence of the individual motions of these so-called fixed stars themselves. Not so with the planets, for even in six months' time Jupiter and Saturn will show a marked change in position, while the planets, still nearer to the Sun than they, show it in much shorter time.

Jupiter is the largest planet of our system; its diameter is more than eleven times that of the Earth and its surface area, 122 times as great. Its actual mass is only 317 times as great in spite of the fact that the space it covers is 1,375 times greater than the Earth's bulk. This must show that this planet has not yet reached the state of solidification and cooling in which we find the Earth and surely produces the possibility of anything like human life existing on the planet.

A similar state of affairs exists on Saturn, the next largest planet. The diameter is nine times as great as Earth's and the actual weight is 100 times as great, while the density again is much less—only an eighth. As far as surface conditions go the difference between Jupiter and Saturn is not very great. The average distance from the Earth of the former is about 450,000,000 miles, that of the latter 886,000,000 miles.

In the matter of moons both these planets have a great advantage over us, for the planet Saturn has no less than nine of commendable size revealing about him, in addition to the brilliant rings which form his most interesting and prominent characteristics. Jupiter also has nine small satellites revolving about him, four of which are easily visible in a small telescope and indeed under fair conditions in an ordinary opera or field glass.

Saturn's Rings.

The view of Saturn and his rings through a small telescope is unsurpassable. You see a great gleaming round ball, surrounded by a bright ring of elliptical shape. It is really circular, or very nearly so, but you are looking at it edge-on. On a good night you will make out a dark space between the ring and Saturn itself, which is the black background of the heavens themselves, where you are looking. You may also see a black line on the ring itself, for what at first seemed like one ring is in truth three, only two of which are visible because of its extreme attenuation. Galileo discovered the rings in 1610, and their nature and construction was positively learned by the use of the telescope late in the nineteenth century. An American, Professor Keeler, showed that the rings were not liquid or solid, but composed of discrete, solid particles of all sizes, revolving about the planet in practically the same orbits and so many in number as to give at the distance the impression of a continuous ring. The rings consisted in simply showing that the inner parts of the rings travel faster than the outer, and would be solid and rigid.

The Ninth Satellite of Saturn.

A particularly important and interesting phenomenon is connected with the ninth and outermost moon of Saturn, to which we would call attention here. Throughout the entire solar system of bodies moving about the Sun and other bodies in turn moving about these a common rule exists, namely, that all of the bodies rotate in the same direction about the larger body. Every body turns in a direction from right to left, or counter-clockwise, as we can actually see the moon doing by comparing its position among the stars on successive nights. Just the opposite motion has been proved to exist in the case of the extraordinary exception, from which one might be led to wonder if it were not possible that this moon did not find its origin in a cosmic birth like that of the other moons of this planet, but entered the family as an outsider captured by the gravitational attraction of the mass of Saturn, as it dashed, like a comet, into the solar system from the depths of outer space.

Children's Serial Story

THE TARGET OF FLAME.

By Paul Holmes. CHAPTER ELEVEN. A Taste of Battle.

For a full moment Francois L'Verne stared into the face of the man who had tricked him. Slowly his face and he stood, white and colorless, with compressed lips. The words of the man whom he had supposed to be Francois Barrois had stunned him. He realized fully the whole meaning of them.

They meant that he had betrayed to the Germans the most vital and secret plans of the French army. He had informed this man that on the eighth of November the French army planned to assault the tower of Roileux; also that on the seventh Francois Barrois, the spy, was to signal the French artillery by means of setting fire to some high building. What this information would mean in German hands Francois knew too well. The French army could easily be deceived into an attack, and meeting the Germans, prepared and well fortified, if not annihilated.

And as for himself, he could not doubt that he would be deemed either a traitor or a weak coward. But that was secondary, he told himself. The French must succeed in their attack on Roileux. They must be in possession of the tower the very next day. And the Germans, he learned the plans, they would fail. There was one man who knew and that man would, of course, convey knowledge to the proper German officer as soon as possible.

But until that man, who stood before him looking at him with a cynical smile, reached these officers the secret of the French plan must be kept. What he had learned. But how? There must be a way! Surely he could not fail in his mission. The secret of France must be kept.

The field marshal was anxious to hear what you have to say," the man went on. "If you will come with me I think a suitable settlement can be arranged."

Desperately L'Verne racked his brain for an idea. If he went into the presence of the field marshal again all would be lost he knew. Yes, if the false Barrois even got to communication with another German soldier the plans would be exposed.

"Come, come," said the man. "The quicker you make your confession the better it will be for you."

The field marshal will send for me at six," he spoke at last. "Let's see, what time is it? He reached for his watch and held it before his face. "Have you a watch?"

Rather impatiently the German fumbled in his pocket. In the instant L'Verne leaped back a few feet and hung the watch with all his strength at the man's head. There was a dull thud as the weapon hit its mark. Stupefied by the blow, L'Verne sprang. As his body bore the man down his fingers closed relentlessly about the throat of his enemy.

The struggle while it lasted was one-sided all the way. The spy, with those terrible, steel-like fingers shutting off his breath, could not cry out. A few minutes later L'Verne arose. He had redeemed himself. The secret of France had died with the German who had found it out. Stretched out on the stone floor was the body of the man who had posed as Franz Barrois. L'Verne hesitated for a time. He was in a quandary as to what course he should pursue. But at least he must leave the place. He knelt down and slowly removed the clothes of his late adversary. An exclamation of satisfaction burst from him when he found two large revolvers, fully loaded, and a cartridge belt with a shell in every partition. Now he had almost an equal chance with any who might oppose him.

Time was precious and he did not waste any of it. In three minutes he was dressed in the uniform of a German private. His weapons were buckled on and he was ready. The big door was still half open as it had been left. It was his duty to save Barrois, or at least attempt it.

Far down the long passage a door opened and a German soldier crept out. L'Verne crouched to the floor. The tramp of feet echoed along the stone passageway. The light of a lantern gleamed in the darkness and by its light the lad saw that the men were clothed in the uniform of the German army.

CHAPTER TWELVE. In the Enemy's Country.

Field Marshal von Mackenburgh paced to and fro in his private headquarters and there was a worried look upon his face. He had good reason to believe that the French were planning some offensive of some sort. He had various hints of this from his spies in the French army, but the coming of an aeroplane had well nigh convinced him. All had been learned from Francois L'Verne, the survivor of the plane, had not helped him at all, but the lad's persistence in answering to the questions led him to believe that something was afoot. Then had come the sensational capture of the French spy, Franz Barrois, who had written in French dispatches that he was to destroy the papers but enough information had been wrung from him to prove conclusively that the French army contemplated the sudden move.

What was this to be? Mackenburgh had at once sent a young officer of his staff to the cell of L'Verne, to try, posing as Barrois, to find out some of the details of the plan. The field marshal looked impatiently at the clock. It was fully time the man was back. He had been gone an hour. If he failed, Mackenburgh told himself, he would wring the truth from either L'Verne or Barrois if he had to resort to heated irons. Time passed and nothing happened. The man was back. He had been gone an hour. If he failed, Mackenburgh told himself, he would wring the truth from either L'Verne or Barrois if he had to resort to heated irons. Time passed and nothing happened. The man was back. He had been gone an hour. If he failed, Mackenburgh told himself, he would wring the truth from either L'Verne or Barrois if he had to resort to heated irons.

When the soldiers returned, some time later, they brought with them the dead body of a German spy. They had found him dead upon the floor of the cell, they explained, after battering down the bolted door. Francois L'Verne had been neither found nor seen. He had disappeared.

When Francois L'Verne stepped out of his cell the dimly lighted passage way was deserted. He looked at the door with the spy's key. There was another key hanging from the ring and he examined this, hoping it provided for an escape from the building. Near the handle of the key was written the number "6." Looking at the ten to his own cell again, he found which he had just looked a big six was painted. The other key then appeared unlocked cell number "9."

Why was it that the German had possessed two keys—one "6" and the other to room "9"?

And then like a flash the solution came. Frank Barrois! Barrois had been captured, the spy had told him, and of course, was confined in a cell. That was more natural than that the German, seeking to learn the facts of the probable French offensive, should first visit him, and if failing there, try to get some information from Barrois. It was plain to him now. Cell "eight" contained Franz Barrois. Cell "eight" L'Verne ran along the passageway. He passed a door numbered "seven," and then, as he had expected, he found door "eight." He took the key, a feeling of doubt came over him. What if Franz Barrois was not within? What if, as was probable, the room was full of German soldiers? Would it not be risking capture, and with capture, the success of the French, to open that door? He thought of his feelings the night before, which he had thought would be his last night. He would have been glad if someone had risked something to help him out of his danger. And now was he to risk his life in the same fix that he had been? Yes, plainly it was his duty to save Barrois, or at least attempt it.

Far down the long passage a door opened and a German soldier crept out. L'Verne crouched to the floor. The tramp of feet echoed along the stone passageway. The light of a lantern gleamed in the darkness and by its light the lad saw that the men were clothed in the uniform of the German army.

In 1882 we were killed to show

Cincinnati for four days, arriving early Sunday morning.

opening Monday afternoon for the entertainment. At that time a high class show company was touring the country in a play called "Natural Gas," headed by Donnelly and Girard,

two high class comedians, and well balanced company, and they,

too, opened in Cincinnati on

evening.

This was a show, but a natural gas was being discovered

in many parts of the middle west, so that the play which

Donnelly and Girard headed

was a big drawing card everywhere they went.

If there was anything that you could not sell Adam Forepaugh, it was an undiscovered gold mine, or oil well. Donnelly and Girard with their entire company came up to the show in the afternoon, and while the balance of the company stood back, Mr. Donnelly went down and introduced himself to Mr. Forepaugh, saying, "I am Donnelly of Donnelly & Girard,

"The Natural Gas Company."

They wanted admission to the show, but Adam Forepaugh mistook

the meaning, and immediately told

Mr. Donnelly in plain words that circus business was his business, and they could not sell him anything, but they could at any price. Mrs. Forepaugh who happened to be at the main entrance was quick to grasp the meaning of Mr. Donnelly's statement, and told him that if he would go to the ticket wagon the ticket agent would fix him out with tickets for his company. Mr. Donnelly told his company the joke, and after they all had had a good laugh, he came to the ticket wagon and told me the experience he had had with Mr. Forepaugh at the main entrance.

I gave him the best reserved seats in the house for himself and his company, and ever after that when I met Donnelly and Girard, the best in the house was none the better for me.

When Mr. Forepaugh

came out to count up the afternoon house, he told me that a fellow by the name of Donnelly had tried to sell him some stock in a natural gas company, but he never dared to mention the joke to the governor.

Mr. Forepaugh always carried a heavy hickory cane with a big hood on the end, which he invariably carried hooked over his left arm, except when he would get a little excited, and then he would grab the cane and make many gestures with it, until it became a joke around the show. One day I christened the cane,

"The Indicator," for he always pointed it at something when he was talking excitedly, or any subject.

I gave one day John A. Forepaugh,

Mr. Forepaugh's nephew, who was manager of the show, came to the wagon and asked me if everything was all right. He said, "I am old and I am as far as I know, and asked him his reason for asking me. He said the governor was coming that way, and he said he was high in the air, "so that you had better have things in good shape when he lands here."

The governor was soon into the ticket wagon, and asked me if I had my position. I told him I had been so busy that I had not checked up lately, and didn't know exactly how I did stand.

"You had better check up," you have been giving my boy, Adie, too much money, and from this time on

I want you to give him another dollar. I own this show, and I want your attention to what I am telling you."

After giving me this advice, he stepped out of the wagon and soon disappeared. In less than five minutes the boy was out and as he always called me "Boss," he said

The QUARTERBREED

By ROBERT AMES BENNET

(Copyright by Brown & Howell Co.)

"You have no right to block the trail," said Hardy. "Allow me to pass."

Vandervyn looked over his shoulder with an insolent sneer. "Go on and pass, if you're in a hurry. You've got all outdoors to do it in. If there's not room enough, shoot me in the back and take the trail. I'll not get out of it for you."

Hardy did not reply nor did he attempt to force a passage. At last, twelve miles from the goal of the heart-breaking race, came the opportunity for which he had been waiting. The trail smoothed out in another easy stretch. For this he had been holding the mare in hand. He started at a canter, and gradually let her strike into her long, swift gallop. Vandervyn saw them coming, and at once put spurs to his luckless pony. As before, Hardy held the mare down to her best long-distance speed. The mare came up alongside the pinto and forged ahead.

Hardy eyed Vandervyn with utmost swiftness. And, as before, at the head of the canyon of Sioux creek, Vandervyn turned in the saddle, and looked full at him with a hateful, mocking smile. He pulled in his staggering pony to a walk the moment Hardy swung into the trail ahead.

At once Hardy eased down the mare to a trot. Though he saw no third pinto waiting in the thickets, his eyes grew hard and cold with grim determination. He was examining his rifle when a turn of the trail suddenly gave him his first view of the broken-topped mountain and the ridge-side where Redbear had made the second attempt to assassinate him. As he looked at the shattered summit, his hazel eyes flashed. He thrust the rifle back into its sheath, and drew the mare down to a walk.

Behind him he heard a muffled drumming of muffled hoofs. Vandervyn was coming up at a gallop.

When the mocking trickster came up behind Hardy, he reined in to a jog trot, and, as before, rode past him with his hand on his hip.

There were marked differences between the third pinto and the two first. He was taller and leaner, and one of his feet was white. But Hardy appeared to be too dejected to heed the fact. As the pinto ambled away in the lead, Vandervyn smiled, and looked back at his rival with all the hate from his face. "By-by again, old man," he muttered. "Sorry I can't stay to keep you company. The lady is waiting—and the mine. It may also please you to hear that I have a duly signed and witnessed contract with the tribe, giving me a fee of 20 per cent on all monies appropriated in payment to the tribe for their mineral lands. Let's hear you congratulate me. Show you're game!"

But Hardy did not raise his eyes. As soon as Vandervyn was out of sight around the castellated rocks at the top of the ridge, Hardy stopped the mare and dropped from the saddle. His shapely mouth was curved in a resolute smile, and his hand was rapidly transferring from the saddlebags to his pockets a pocket ax, a handful of pistol cartridges and the legal notices for posting a mining claim.

He glanced up the slope, and, seeing no sign of Vandervyn, stripped off the mare's bridle, sponged out her nostrils and mouth with the last water in his canteen.

Hardy took the steep slope at an unhurried pace. He reached the place where he had found the bloody trail of Redbear. Up the cliff the climbing was not stiff. He came out on the valley slope, extremely hot and dry but not out of breath. Drawing an athletic nervous to the opposite mountain-side, where he had seen the light of Howard-Konza's campfire through the darkness, he started down into the valley as if on a jog as that of the third pinto. He was almost spent as he entered through the pines up the last slope. The camp was gone, but he knew the nearest way to the spring.

He rested two or three minutes, respectfully cooling his throat, but drinking only a very few sips. Again refreshed, he half filled his canteen, and started on up the easy mountain slope at a steady jog.

Ten minutes brought him over the summit to the sharp pitch above the mine. He stared down at the terrace several moments, however, before he made out the figures of a man and woman waiting at the first turn of the trail. There could be no doubt that the two were Marie and her father.

It was no less certain that Vandervyn had not yet arrived. Even had he suspected his opponent's stratagem, he scarcely could have covered the seven miles of trail in as short a time as Hardy had taken to make the three miles across country.

The two watchers never thought to look about and up the mountain. They had not yet looked about when he came down upon the crest of the spur. A large, newly cut stake gave him a hint where one of the upper corners of the claim should be located. He cut his own stake, drove it, and tacked on one of his legal notices. Another stake indicated the other upper corner, and he swiftly repeated the making of his own stake and posting of the notice.

At the curb of the mine shaft he posted another notice. He was now in plain view from the cabin, but out of sight of the watchers down on the trail. On the terrace, as he was working the third stake into a bed of loose rocks, he heard an angry exclamation over near the cabin. Dupont and Ma-side. "Ah-h-h!" gasped Marie. "Hardy drew the rifle out of Vandervyn's relaxing grasp."

"Stand aside, sir!" he quietly commanded. "I wish to speak alone with Miss Dupont."

Vandervyn had parted with his rifle as if dazed. At the sound of Hardy's voice a fresh wave of crimson flooded his face. He stepped back, and jerked out his revolver. Hardy leaped upon him like a panther, and struck the weapon aside. The heavy bullet whizzed past Hardy's head. A moment later, Vandervyn, though the younger and perhaps the stronger of the two, reeled away, clutching his lacerated trigger finger. Hardy stood with the revolver in his hand. He turned to Marie.

"May I ask for a few words alone with you?"

"No!" Vandervyn hoarsely forbade the girl. "You shall not speak with him. Take you're her father—tell her she shall not."

"You know she don't never mind what I say," mumbled Dupont. "Any-way, it sort of looks like Cap is running this here shindy."

Hardy had not glanced away from Marie. Throughout that supreme test of the will power and courage of her two lovers, she had stood tense and silent, as if spellbound. She now looked from one to the other, her face inscrutably calm, her black eyes fathomless.

"I will hear what Captain Hardy has to say," she said.

Hardy motioned her father and Vandervyn toward the mine dump. They obeyed.

"We are alone," said Marie.

Hardy smiled. "I won the race."

"Was it fair, cutting across country?"

"Fair? Then you did not know of his scheme."

"What scheme? I do not understand."

"It does not now matter. I won the race and—the mine."

"Do you expect me to rejoice with you?" asked the girl. "It has cost my father his half of the mine."

"How so? He is not an entryman?"

"Reggie gave him a deed to a half-interest."

"I see," said Hardy. "Quite in keeping. The deed is absolutely void, and would have been no less so even had the grantor been first to reach here."

"You doubt his good faith?" The girl glanced past him toward the silent figure of Vandervyn on the mine dump with her father. "So you thought it better to take it all yourself than to let him take it all?"

"Yes," agreed Hardy.

The girl's red lips curved in an ironical smile.

"I do not go with the mine—necessarily."

"No. But the mine necessarily goes with you—now," replied Hardy.

"Be so kind as to explain. I understand that you were ordered to Alaska."

"Were you not told of my return as far as the battle?"

"Then your orders to leave were countermanded," Marie evaded the question.

His eyes darkened, and his face contracted as if from a twinge of pain. But he replied with quiet steadiness: "That is of no consequence. May I ask if you consider my word good?"

"Yes." The answer was given without an instant's hesitation.

He smiled gravely. "You cannot think I came back to win the mine for myself. You have my word that I will assign it to you as soon as I have the legal right."

"Put down that rifle—put it down, sir!"

The muscles of Vandervyn's neck twitched. Along the top of the barrel he was glaring back at Hardy—glaring into those hazel eyes that met his fury with the clear, cool gaze of absolute courage. The sheer nerve of that steady approach to his rifle muzzle compelled him to prance. It disconcerted him; it struck a chill into the heat of his frenzy.

Still Hardy advanced, swift and steady, his gaze never so much as flickering. Now his eyes and forehead, close beyond the foresight of the rifle, appeared enormously enlarged to Vandervyn's distorted vision. Steadily Hardy put in his head, took hold of the rifle barrel, and turned the muzzle aside.

JOBLESS ARTISTS WORK AT GOVERNMENT JOBS.

(SPECIAL TO THE GAZETTE.)

London, Dec. 2.—Artists in distress through the war are being employed to decorate the walls of many of the public schools of this city with friezes and pards, illustrative of life and industry in the British Dominions beyond the seas. One of the most striking pictures depicts London with St. Paul's cathedral overlooking the Thames, and barges and steamers moving about the river. Others are of pastoral scenes in Canada, Austria,

South Africa and the West Indies. By extending the work throughout the school system the board of education hopes to develop the imagination of the pupils and possibly develop a large school of decorative painting in England.

TO PREVENT REPETITION OF BABY SLINGSBY CASE.

(SPECIAL TO THE GAZETTE.)

London, Dec. 2.—London hospitals are considering the use of baby foot-prints for purposes of identification to prevent baby mixups and obviate repetition of the Baby Slingsby case. Efforts have been made for some time to take finger prints of new-born infants but their tiny fists squirm and clutch so actively that the plan failed. The foot-print is said to be quite as distinctive as the finger-print and a lot easier to take.

The football authorities of the Big Nine Western College Conference met at Chicago today to map out the 1917 football schedule. There was a good deal of speculation yesterday as to just what the winner, Ohio State, and the runner up, Northwestern, would ask in the way of 1917 dates. Last fall when the schedule was made up, neither were regarded seriously by the schedule makers on the other colleges and both took what was left. Ohio State did not meet Chicago, Wisconsin, Illinois and smaller schools on the schedule. Minnesota doesn't care to play Ohio State early in the season and that a late game is regarded as impossible, unless there is a radical change in all the schedules.

ATWOOD TO LEAD CARROLL IN 1917

Wins Election Over Bob Moore, Also of Janesville, for Football Team Captaincy by One Vote.

Edward Atwood of this city yesterday was elected captain of the 1917 Carroll college, Waukesha football team. Opposing Atwood for the captaincy was another Janesville boy, Robert Moore. The vote of the squad favored the elect by a single ballot, the final count being 7 to 5. Thirteen members of the squad were awarded the official "V".

Atwood in his high school days had never much of a football player but under the tutelage of competent coaches has developed wonderfully during his two years at Carroll. Eddie's long suit, just like "Herc" Edler's is buster. Atwood was an all-state forward with a member of the local school basketball team. He was also a member of the Lakota Cardinals during the past two seasons.

RACE SEASON BRINGS OUT "SALTER" GOLD

Berlin Dec. 2.—With the close of the racing season nearly everywhere in Germany it has been found that the gold pieces that were turned in at the "gates" during the summer, in return for reduced prices of admission, total about half a million marks.

Whereas the majority of the press at first greeted this news as "altogether satisfactory," a portion of the papers, after thinking it over, have decided that it is "altogether disgraceful" to discover that so large a number of people obviously and unpatriotically abstained from turning in their gold until induced to do so in order to buy amusement a little cheaper.

Part of the press is thoroughly indignant that in these days of appeals from all sources to turn in gold, in these days of collecting bureaux for old gold and ornaments, there should still be so many persons in the empire who will not be moved by any lessons to help bring our financial system into consonance with the enormous demands upon it. This portion of the press questions whether the Reichsbank is right in its policy of trying to collect all the gold in the empire by voluntary surrender.

POST SEASON GAMES NEEDED TO DECIDE H. S. FOOTBALL TITLE

Three Teams Voicing Claims for Honors as is Case After Every Thanksgiving Day.

Who's the Wisconsin state high school football champion? Rock county says Edgerton. Up at Oshkosh followers of the Sawdust team are claiming the honors. Over at Green Bay similar claims are being heard.

Just like in former years—because Wisconsin high school athletic affairs are such a jumble of this and that no team can really be called the state champs.

Both Oshkosh and Green Bay it appears, are ready to back their claims by game with Edgerton or with each other. High school authorities are not expected to evidence very much interest in the triple tie but as previous will be content to let the high schools squabble on.

Oshkosh's readiness to show a better record than Edgerton is all bunk. Comparative scores are nothing and the fact has never more forcibly been shown than this year. The only way to settle the question is to fight it out.

Green Bay, tied Thanksgiving day by West Green Bay and previous in the season by Oshkosh and Marinette, were comparative scores to be taken into consideration, cannot really make any more claims than the teams which they are tied with.

If Edgerton is willing to back its claims by another game, then it seems only best policy to consider only Oshkosh.

That the better team won at La Crosse in the "championship" battle is the opinion of the press of that place. Here's what they said Friday night:

"Coach Bell of the high school today is of the opinion that Edgerton has a better football eleven than La Crosse."

"We were beaten by a better team," he said, when interviewed today. "My boys showed a lot of fight, but I think Edgerton has the better team."

"The coach was inclined to the opinion that La Crosse has played better football this season than it did Thursday. He had no comment to make regarding the referee."

"Coach Lamoureux and Dexter of Edgerton were sure Edgerton had the better team."

"La Crosse was beaten by a better team," said "Runt" Jefferson, former La Crosse star, who was head linesman. "La Crosse has had a good defense all season but the offense is not strong enough."

"Edgerton played better football in every department of the game," said Layton Gouldin, faculty manager of athletics.

THE GAZETTE'S MOTORIST PROBLEM DEPARTMENT

(Published Saturdays.)

Motoring Department, The Gazette.—I have a chain-driven car, and occasionally one of the chains comes off. The sprockets are badly worn, but apparently not enough to account for it. How can I prevent this?

Evidently the chains are stretching because of wear and need tightening. You will find distance rods running from rear axle to frame. Each carries a turn-buckle which must be turned in such a way as to lengthen the rod. Turn each one the same distance. This will remove the slack from the chain and help to prevent trouble.

Motoring Department, The Gazette.—Why is kerosene not used for automobiles? Kerosene is much cheaper than gasoline and is used in farm engines. Why is it not used in an automobile engine? E. L. B.

In order to evaporate kerosene a special form of carburetor is necessary which gives enough heat for the purpose. The heat is obtained by first running the engine on gasoline. This requires a special form of carburetor and, although there are several on the market, none of them seem to have given general satisfaction.

Motoring Department, The Gazette.—Recently my engine refused to run and had to be towed home. I removed the magneto, but can get no spark from it. The breaker points are clear and separate and the brushes in good condition. Please tell me where you think the trouble may be and if it is anything I can fix myself. J. K. L.

Although not so stated we assume you have a high tension magneto of the usual type. Inspect safety spark gap, as this sometimes short-circuits the magneto. If that is all right the trouble is in the windings of the armature. These can only be rewound by an expert using the proper tools. You had better ship the magneto to the manufacturers and have it properly overhauled.

Motoring Department, The Gazette.—Will you kindly publish the following valuable formula for obtaining the R. P. M. of a motor, when the miles per hour and gear are known. These can only be obtained by an expert using the proper tools. You had better ship the magneto to the manufacturers and have it properly overhauled.

Multiply diameter of tire by 3.1416 and reduce to feet. This gives circumference of wheel. Reduce miles per hour to feet per minute. Divide feet per minute by circumference of wheel, which gives R. P. M. of rear wheel. Multiply this by reduction at differential. This will give R. P. M. of motor if gears are in direct drive. To determine miles per hour, divide R. P. M. by reduction at differential and multiply by circumference of rear wheel. This gives number of feet traveled in one minute. Multiply by 60 to get feet in one hour and divide by 5,280 to get miles per hour.

Motoring Department, The Gazette.—I find my steering is developing a few inches of lost motion, and it seems to be growing larger. Is this anything serious? If it shows wear in the steering gear, what is the best way to take it up? A. M. R.

Any looseness developing in the steering gear should be attended to at once, as your life depends upon the steering gear being in proper condition. Loosen lock nut at top of steering gear and screw down on adjustment until it binds. Fasten locking nut. Then see if other connections are working loose and tighten them. Make sure that all nuts and cotter pins are properly secured.

Motoring Department, The Gazette.—In a light car like the Ford roadster would it make it ride easier and less liable to overturn in rounding corners if one would place iron weights of 20 to 100 pounds on each side of the body of the car? Do the so-called shock absorbers really take up enough shock on Ford roadsters to warrant installing them? E. A. H.

If the weights were suspended from the centre of the axles they would add stability, but if carried on floor boards they would help to overturn. A good shock absorber will add much to the easy riding quality of your car. Try different ones, having them installed on approval.

Motoring Department, The Gazette.—I have a Standard Dayton car, 1910 model. Would like to know how to connect it up so as to start on batteries and after starting so as to start on batteries and after starting Motoring Department, The Gazette.—I have a 1912 Studebaker car, four-cylinder, which runs on a 1500-mile limit, but going beyond that limit it starts to chug and pound. By immediately turning off gas it stops. The carburetor has no needle, valve or mixing chamber. Cylinder four inches in bore. The inlet manifold pipe is one and one-fourth inches in diameter. Would you prefer a Zenith or Master carburetor? If so, how?

An engine which has run four years will probably have developed piston-slap, which cannot be removed except by replacing worn pistons with larger ones and connecting rod either at wrist pin or crankshaft. Have carbon knock and remove crank case, to inspect connecting rods. By all means install an up-to-date carburetor.

When in doubt take your car to a good garage.

In tuning up a six-cylinder motor one should be very careful to note that there is good compression in each cylinder. In a four-cylinder motor the sound of the exhaust will reveal a weak cylinder. From the exhaust of a six-cylinder motor, however, the condition of a particular cylinder is hard to detect. A very often a weak cylinder is not detected, and the cylinder adjustment is changed to eliminate the supposed thump in the motor. In reality, the cause lies in a weak cylinder.

On account of the heavy strain which holds of demountable rims are subjected to, it is advisable to make frequent inspections and see that all bolts are kept tight. If the threads of any bolts are worn, put in new bolts, as many unexpected accidents occur through this neglect.

to run on magneto. I have a Splitdorf four-point switch No. 1, points marked BC, MA, M2, and B. Splitdorf coil marked 3, D. S. magneto model. Have had every thing tested out and found that I cannot get it connected up right. Would like an early reply, which will be greatly appreciated. G. E. F.

Connect "D" of coil to distributor on magneto, 3 of coil to 3 on magneto, 5 on coil to 5 on switch. Connect "A" of coil to "A" (armature) of magneto, M2 of switch to 2 on magneto. Connect B of switch to either end of battery and connect other end of battery to B, making two wires on this terminal. This will enable you to start on battery and run on magneto.

Motoring Department, The Gazette.—Please answer the following questions about tires. Is it really necessary to carry a tire sleeve? Isn't a blowout patch sufficient to protect the tube? It covers the weak spot completely, so why use a tire sleeve? Tire sleeve should always be used whenever the blowout patch is necessary. It keeps dirt from working through the cut in the shoe and prevents the cut from spreading. There is a terrible strain at each end of the cut and the sleeve, if properly applied, takes the strain off the shoe. Therefore, would suggest that you carry a sleeve and use it whenever the blowout patch is used.

Motoring Department, The Gazette.—What is the best way to locate a tire which is cracked around the front of my car, but am unable to locate it.

Pullman or Freight?

No one would think of riding in a freight car if he could enjoy the comfort of a big, comfortable easy riding Pullman parlor car.

So with automobiles. Most of the popular priced cars ride like freight cars. This is due to the old fashioned type of spring.

Many manufacturers still continue to use them. The Overland does not. The 75 B Overland has the latest type of cantilever shock absorbing springs. As a result it is one of the easiest riding cars in the world. One demonstration will prove this. $635 f. o. b. Toledo.

BRITISH DESTROYERS CONVOY MERCHANTMEN OF THE NORWEGIANS

Natural Vessels in North Sea Guarded by Allied Warcraft.

The board the "S. S. Jupiter," some 1,000 tons, was seen on Dec. 2, German destroyers were seen on the coast of Norway, and the British destroyers were seen on the coast of Norway.

As the "Jupiter," a Norwegian boat, came up the water of the North Sea from Bergen to Newcastle, a British destroyer was seen on either side. The "Jupiter" was seen on the coast of Norway, and the British destroyers were seen on the coast of Norway.

Each time a vessel of any kind was seen in sight, whether sailing ship, trawler, fishing smack or what not, the "Jupiter" changed her course and went down the coast of Norway, and the British destroyers were seen on the coast of Norway.

These precautions are not idle. The waters around Norway are alive with submarines, and the British destroyers are seen on the coast of Norway.

A number of boats are known to be in the waters around Norway, and the British destroyers are seen on the coast of Norway.

The "Jupiter" is a Norwegian boat, and the British destroyers are seen on the coast of Norway.

There is no doubt that the commanders of the submarine have special orders to destroy Norwegian ships.

Two months ago, a well-known submarine commander was seen on the coast of Norway, and the British destroyers are seen on the coast of Norway.

These things have stirred the country, and the British destroyers are seen on the coast of Norway.

LAWMAKERS FLOCKING BACK TO WASHINGTON

Washington, Dec. 2.—Five hundred members of congress, with hundreds of camp-followers, invaded Washington today, singly and by groups, to take up the business of the nation at noon Monday.

Down town hotels were filled to capacity with the lawmakers, their families and the usual gallery attracted by the glamour of an opening session of congress, featured by a nationally delivered message from the president.

The capitol is newly washed and renovated to receive the members. Washington, used to being a dull place, is brightened up at the prospect of a lively, if short session between tomorrow and March 4.

While many older representatives and senators in the conference of their office had been able to go to home here, others, dependent on hotels for accommodation, scrambled with the ordinary people for rooms, and the attendant, three-fourths of congress.

Since the close of the memorable session of last summer, culminated by the passage of the Adams-Sikes bill, the capitol legislative building has been inhabited principally by mice and clerks, busy here while the members back home rebuilt political fences or found them past rebuilding.

The chief activity has been the sweeping of the capitol grounds. In the capitol grounds, except the capitol grounds, active agents of the capitol guides.

Seventeen senators are attending their last session. William C. Capper, the late Senator Clarke of Arkansas, was expected to be about the only new voice in the senate until March 4.

Miss Jeanette Rankin, representative-elect from Montana to succeed Representative Tom Swain, was the subject of much discussion. She is not here, as her term will not begin until next session—but members expect to see her when she comes back.

Munich, Important German City, Recently Attacked By Aviators

Washington, D. C., Dec. 2.—Munich, the third city in the German empire, which recently received its baptism of bombs at the hands of a French aviator, is described in the following bulletin issued by the National Geographic Society:

"The great railroad station at Munich which the French war office reports was hit by bombs dropped by a captain of the French aviation corps is the heart of a great network of lines which connect the Bavarian capital with all parts of Europe. Situated in a plain on the River Isar, the city is 200 miles in an air line east of the Alsatian border of France, and about forty miles north of the Tyrolean frontier of Austria. Its latitude corresponds to that of St. John's, Newfoundland, but owing to its proximity to the Alps (twenty miles to the south) its climate is extremely variable.

"In point of population Munich is exceeded only by Berlin and Hamburg among German cities. With 550,000 inhabitants it was somewhat larger than Cleveland and smaller than Boston in 1910, but it is highly probable that this number has been appreciably decreased since the war began, just as in the case of Berlin, which had 2,071,000 people in 1910 but which had only 1,826,000 on February 1, 1918, according to official figures.

"In physical aspects Munich is one of the most impressive of modern cities. Its royal palaces, its magnificent national theatre, its great royal library containing 1,100,000 volumes and 50,000 rare manuscripts, its broad thoroughfares, particularly the Ludwigstrasse and Maximilianstrasse, bordered by the great office buildings of the Bavarian government, and its famous university, which ranks first among the German institutions of learning in the number of its medical students and second only to Berlin in the number of students of all classes—all these and many other buildings and institutions make the municipality one of the chief prizes of the Teutonic people.

"Most of the modern improvements and practically all of its architectural splendor Munich owes to Louis I and his art-loving successors. Louis came to the throne in 1825 and ruled for more than twenty years. One of the impressive monuments of his reign is the beautiful Propylaea, modeled after the gate to the Athenian acropolis, and the reliefs which decorate this structure quite fittingly tell the story of Greece's war of independence and the events transpiring in that kingdom during the eventful reign of King Otto I. Louis' son, who was elected to the throne of Greece in 1832, but was finally expelled after thirty years. Another beautiful Munich gateway is the Siegestor (Gate of Victory), modeled after the arch of Constantine in Rome.

"The commercial life of Munich is scarcely less interesting than its artistic side. In America the name of the city is indelibly associated with its most important article of export, beer. In scientific circles Munich's optical and mathematical instruments have a world-wide reputation, while the art of lithography had its birth here, more than 100 miles of canals thread the city in all directions.

"Munich owes its beginning to Duke Henry the Lion, who in 1158 established a mint here and built a bridge across the Isar in order that he might the more easily levy a toll on the salt obtained from the springs of Reichenhall and neighboring villages. The city occupies the site of the ancient monastery of Tegernsee, hence its name (Munich, the beer). In 1277 the place was almost completely destroyed by fire, but it was soon rebuilt by Emperor Louis, the avarian, in the form which it retained up to the accession of Louis I in the 19th century.

"America has had a share in the beautification of Munich, for it was Benjamin Thompson, a native of Woburn, Mass., who laid out the magnificent park of six hundred acres known as the English Garden. For his many services to the Bavarian government the American scientist and administrator was made a count of the Holy Roman Empire, and he chose as his title the name of Rumford, after the little New Hampshire village (the modern Concord) where he had spent his boyhood. It was Thompson who, upon clearing the streets of Munich of more than 2,500 mendicants and housing them in an institution

ENGLISH RELIEF TO BELGIUM BIG

London, Dec. 2.—Foodstuffs amounting to 2,300,000 tons and valued at $227,000,000 have been sent into Belgium and northern France since the outbreak of the war by the Commission for Relief in Belgium, says a report just issued here. Besides foodstuffs the commission has shipped into this war zone something like 5,000,000 articles of clothing.

Allied government subsidies for the relief of people in these stricken districts have amounted to $13,000,000. Public subscriptions, in kind and in money, and other private money, amounted to approximately $30,000,000, of which the United States gave about 35 per cent and the British empire nearly all the rest.

The population confined to this territory as a result of the war, all of whom received bread from the commission, numbers, according to the report, 9,500,000.
